

DAVID WILSON

writer

David Wilson discovered validation for his creations as a child when a grammar school art teacher recognized his work. His mother, also an artist, poet, and craftsperson, promptly enrolled him in private art and music lessons. He continued to pursue art and participated in numerous theatrical productions, discovering the stage as both an actor and behind the scenes in a technical capacity. In front of the camera, David has worked as a stuntman and recently as an extras actor in several first-season episodes of the hit TV drama series "Prison Break."

As a professional writer he has published articles in a local newspaper as a sports correspondent reporter, on internet art sites, and in numerous martial arts magazines as well. He plans to continue writing and publishing works that add clarity in the creative and wellness arts.

Dave channels his visionary art ability by working as a designer and buyer with Lula's Jewelry and More, his family's small jewelry and crafts business. David is also interested in archaeology, astrology, traditional Chinese medicine, acupuncture, feng shui, and the Sumerian language. David has also developed several of his own tarot decks, one standard, the other based in Chinese geomancy.
